Where did your organization stand on these issues prior to making these commitments

Norway is a strong advocate and supporter of UN peace diplomacy. The unprecedented humanitarian needs illustrate the need for the international community to invest more in conflict prevention. The UN has a unique mandate and plays an important role in this field. The need to support and further develop UN preventive diplomacy tools was one of the key messages from the three 2015 UN reviews which, together with the WHS, have helped to build momentum in this area.

How is your organization assessing progress

It is difficult to measure progress. However, we have noted a number of positive developments:
- Secretary-General has conflict prevention as a top priority; launched an initiative to enhance UN mediation capacity; and initiated an internal review of the UN’s peace and security strategy, functioning and architecture.
- DPA’s Multi-Year Appeal fully funded for the first time in 2016.
- Wider DPA donor base in 2016.
- More experts on DPA mediation rosters.
- Increasing demand for the UN Standby Team.
- Joint UN–World Bank flagship study on development and conflict prevention.

Challenges faced in implementation

Norway, together with like-minded countries, is still struggling to achieve better and more predictable funding for the DPA in the UN’s Fifth Committee.

Next step to advance implementation in 2017

Norway will increase its voluntary contributions to the DPA in 2017.

Where did your organization stand on these issues prior to making these commitments

The magnitude and complexity of today’s conflicts, which have resulted in unprecedented humanitarian needs, illustrate the need for the international community to invest more in analysis and mediation capacity to prevent and solve conflict. Norway pursues a stable, predictable policy as regards mediation and conflict resolution. We take a long-term approach that has been maintained by successive Norwegian governments.

Achievements at a glance

Norway has made both human and financial resources available for peace and reconciliation efforts, and has flexible funding mechanisms in place for this purpose. This, together with the substantial amount of development assistance Norway provides, makes it possible not only to support negotiation processes, but also to help secure sustainable peace settlements by contributing to monitoring mechanisms and peacebuilding.

Norway has supported the establishment of the Norwegian Center for Conflict Resolution (NOREF) and its engagement in various initiatives.

Norway has been a major contributor to the UNITAR-IPI Fellowship Programme, which is the only programme within the UN system to provide training in preventive diplomacy and peacemaking. Since its inception in 1993, the programme has provided intensive training to 847 senior and mid-level UN staff, regional organisation staff and diplomats. In 2016, 38 fellows were carefully selected to participate.

For support to the African Union Commission, see 5C.

How is your organization assessing progress

Peace and reconciliation work requires a long-term approach. This makes measuring results a challenging process. Norway attaches importance to collecting and systematising experience gained from peace processes, in part to make it easier to measure results.

The role of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs is to support other actors who are carrying out projects or programmes that will be instrumental in achieving the commitment. Progress is primarily traced through the grant management process, including reporting by our implementing partners.

Challenges faced in implementation

Peace and reconciliation work means involvement in difficult processes where outcomes are highly uncertain and there is considerable political risk. We seek to reduce this risk through strategic planning, follow-up and control.

Next step to advance implementation in 2017

In 2017, we will continue to develop our expertise in transitional justice and ceasefires, and in inclusive processes and the gender perspective. We will continue to collect and systematise information on experience gained from peace processes and knowledge about trends in international conflict resolution, and further develop and strengthen Norwegian peace research expertise by supporting collaboration between Norwegian and international research institutions.

Norway will increase its voluntary contributions to the DPA in 2017, including support for the DPA’s collaboration with regional organisations that is earmarked for conflict analysis and mediation training. Norway is about to sign an agreement to support the UN office to the AU to build the AU’s preventive and mediation capacity.

Where did your organization stand on these issues prior to making these commitments

Norway has been engaged in numerous peace processes over several decades. Promoting conflict resolution and reconciliation is a central element of Norwegian foreign policy.

Norway was among the first countries to develop a national action plan for women, peace and security. In our third plan, we have built on the experience gained from our evaluations. We had already done a good deal of work in this field, but we wanted to further intensify our efforts. By early January 2016, the guidelines for the Ministry’s follow-up of the action plan were launched. These set out more clearly than ever what is expected of employees in the Ministry and the missions abroad.

Achievements at a glance

Norway has facilitated and supported different peace processes (e.g. Colombia, Philippine). Norway has continued to work for the integration of a gender perspective and women’s participation in peace processes where we are involved, most notably in the Colombian and Philippine processes. We have supported the involvement of women and civil society in the Syria talks in Geneva. Together with the other Nordic countries and South Africa, we continue to promote the network of women mediators, in close dialogue with the AU and others. In September, the Prime Minister launched a dialogue mechanism between civil society organisations, spearheaded by the Women’s Alliance for Security Leadership, and national authorities.

As a follow-up to the Action Plan for Women, Peace and Security, the Ministry developed a set of indicators and established baselines for 2015. The first report is to be prepared this year. In addition, focus countries are developing their own work plans and reporting through established reporting mechanisms. We have annual meetings with major recipients of Norwegian humanitarian and development funds, and follow these up with field visits and further monitoring as needed.

Challenges faced in implementation

Peace and reconciliation work means involvement in difficult processes where outcomes are highly uncertain and there is considerable political risk. We seek to reduce this risk through strategic planning, follow-up and control.

Norway supports the Women’s Advisory Board (WAB) in Geneva to promote women’s participation in the Syrian peace process. While the talks were suspended, the WAB’s main function was to consult as broadly as possible with Syrian women’s organisations to ensure a broad ‘buy-in’ to the political process.

Next step to advance implementation in 2017

Norway will continue to support peace processes, dialogue initiatives, capacity and confidence building measures in several countries. We will promote Security Council resolution 1325 and incorporate its recommendations into all our peace and reconciliation efforts.

A new focus area that emerged this year is the Peace Building Commission, as we recently became a member. Another arena where we will intensify our efforts is the OSCE. In both forums, we are seeking to ensure a clear focus on women, peace and security. In addition, we are committed to doing more to combat SGBV in conflict.

Where did your organization stand on these issues prior to making these commitments

Mobilising financial support for humanitarian mine action will depend on making effective use of available resources - and on showing results. More experience, new technology and improved methodologies are available to the mine action sector today than when the conventions were adopted. All affected countries should therefore be able to complete mine clearance within a reasonable period of time. This requires using funding for evidence-based survey and clearance, rather than costly and time-intensive clearance of areas where there is no evidence of contamination. In addition, by endorsing and implementing the Safe Schools Declaration, states contribute to protecting education from attack.

Achievements at a glance

Norway supported global mine action, including victim assistance, in 20 countries in 2016. Financial contributions increased by more than 40% from the previous year, partly due to major new country efforts initiated in Colombia and Iraq. Together with the US, we launched the Global Demining Initiative for Colombia in February 2016 to mobilise support for humanitarian mine action as a key component of post-conflict peacebuilding in Colombia. The initiative brought together more than 20 donor countries along with the European Union, and over USD 105 million was pledged for mine action in Colombia.
In June 2016, the Global Partnership for Education (GPE) Board adopted a decision recognizing the Safe Schools Declaration as an initiative that can improve the protection of education against attack. In November 2016, Norway sponsored and co-hosted a regional workshop focusing on the implementation of the Guidelines by African Union states. Norway has continued to raise the Safe Schools issue in bilateral meetings. Between June and December 2016, six more states endorsed the Safe Schools Declaration.

How is your organization assessing progress

Reports such as the annual ‘Clearing the Mines’ report drawn up by Mine Action Review and jointly presented to the 15th Meeting of States Parties to the Anti-Personnel Mine Ban Convention in November 2016 by the three largest demining operators, indicate that in 2015 a slightly lower total area of land was cleared globally, but twice the number of submunitions were detected and destroyed. This should indicate that clearance efforts have become better targeted.

The Norwegian Ministry of Foreign Affairs is the depository for endorsements of the Safe Schools Declaration. Norway funds the Global Coalition to Protect Education from Attack which tracks implementation of the commitments contained in the declaration.

Challenges faced in implementation

Many affected countries are not on track to meet their mine clearance deadlines.

Strengthening compliance with international humanitarian law is a critical issue. The importance of the humanitarian principles, which are essential to providing access to affected populations and protection for aid workers, was reiterated by Norway and others during the World Humanitarian Summit.

Next step to advance implementation in 2017

Norway believes that the demining sector should focus more on country-level efforts in order to accelerate progress. National authorities, mine action operators and donors need to identify and address remaining challenges. In its capacity as Coordinator for Clearance and Risk Reduction Education under the Convention on Cluster Munitions for 2015-2017, Norway organised the first workshop at country level in Lebanon in November to bring together all relevant stakeholders to discuss best practices and strategic planning.

Norway promoted and took part in the preparations for the Second Safe Schools Conference in Argentina in March 2017.

Norway will intensify efforts to combat sexual violence in humanitarian crises. We will increase support for measures relating to women’s health in humanitarian crises.

If you had one message for the annual report on what is most needed to advance the transformation Respect and protect civilians and civilian objects in the conduct of hostilities, what would it be

Continued progress in global mine action depends on affected countries having the political will to make demining a national priority, as well as having access to funding.

Where did your organization stand on these issues prior to making these commitments

Norway has always been committed to the principles of humanity, impartiality, neutrality and independence in humanitarian action. In a time where these humanitarian principles are under increasing pressure in several conflict situations, Norway deems it necessary to actively highlight their continued significance and relevance. We also believe that integration of these principles into relevant humanitarian policy frameworks can raise awareness and increase commitment to ensuring delivery of principled humanitarian aid.

Norway has for many years provided financial and political support to the ICRC Health Care in Danger initiative. We are deeply concerned by deliberate attacks on health workers and health institutions and strongly condemn such acts.

Achievements at a glance

In 2016, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and several Norwegian NGOs developed a guidance note entitled ‘Ensuring Respect for the Humanitarian Principles’. The objective is to ensure a common understanding of what the Ministry of Foreign Affairs expects of its partners in order to reduce the risk of non-compliance with humanitarian principles.

Norway continues to highlight the importance of respecting the humanitarian principles in relevant national and international forums, and we encourage our humanitarian partners to do the same. We also continue to include wording on the humanitarian principles in grant agreements.

General Assembly resolution 69/132 on the protection of health workers, developed by the Foreign Policy and Global Health initiative under the Norwegian chairmanship of the group, broke new ground in securing the commitment of all states to respect the principles of medical ethics in addition to their commitments under IHL, and also commitments to a wide range of preventive measures against violence against health workers.

How is your organization assessing progress
Through continuous dialogue with our humanitarian partners and evaluation of their risk assessments, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs makes certain that they follow up on their commitments.

Next step to advance implementation in 2017

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs will invite its humanitarian partners to a follow-up meeting by the end of 2017 to take stock of the extent to which our partners have operationalised the risk assessments set out in the guidance note. We will also evaluate the relevance of recommendations for each phase of the project cycle based on feedback from our partners, in order to identify any need for adjustments and improvements.

The support to the ICRC Health Care in Danger initiative will be continued, and we are planning to engage in the informal group of friends of Health Care in Danger in Geneva.

Where did your organization stand on these issues prior to making these commitments

There is broad international agreement that much of the harm caused to civilians in armed conflict might be avoided, if only international humanitarian law were properly respected and implemented by the parties to conflicts. In other words, the main problem is not the law, but the lack of respect for and/or full implementation of the law. Increased efforts to strengthen compliance with IHL among parties to armed conflicts is therefore urgently needed. For this reason Norway is a strong supporter of the initiative launched by Switzerland and the ICRC to establish an international compliance mechanism.

Where did your organization stand on these issues prior to making these commitments

Since 2006, Norway has explicitly required organisations that receive support for humanitarian projects to integrate the gender perspective into their work and to report on this topic. Organisations are also required to evaluate the relevance of projects with regard to Security Council resolution 1325 on women, peace and security. This has been an important driver for including the gender perspective in the work of these organisations. Although most organisations have guidelines and strategies in place, there is still a need for the Ministry to monitor the humanitarian organisations and hold them accountable for inclusion of gender.

Achievements at a glance
- The topic is raised in meetings with humanitarian organisations. We consider this to be an integrated part of the application and reporting process to the Ministry.
- The Ministry granted Norwegian Church Aid NOK 66 million for a three-year programme on reduction of gender based violence. The programme is being implemented in DR Congo, Mali, South Sudan and Burundi and is part of Norwegian Church Aid’s global programme on reducing GBV.
- The earthquake in Haiti in 2010 resulted in Norwegian engagement in country, including collaboration with the Haitian national police on SGBV. The Government of Haiti has adopted a national plan to prevent and fight SGBV. The police team has been instrumental in achieving this work. The team is currently training all police districts in Haiti on how to investigate and prevent SGBV. The Haiti national police academy has incorporated prevention of SGBV in its curriculum for all the police cadets.
- In 2016, Norway supported the ICRC appeal to prevent/respond to sexual violence with NOK 15 million.

How is your organization assessing progress

The gender perspective is now better integrated into all areas of humanitarian response supported by Norway, but there is still a need for the Ministry to monitor the organisations and hold them accountable for inclusion of gender.

Challenges faced in implementation

Humanitarian organisations need to ensure that there is knowledge and awareness of gender issues in the field. The fight against sexual and gender based violence is challenging, as the problem is so huge and so pervasive. It takes times to change social norms and to promote women’s rights and status.

Next step to advance implementation in 2017
- Norwegian humanitarian organisations participated in a conference on 8 March 2017 to present how they are integrating the gender perspective in their work and to discuss gaps and challenges.
- Norwegian Church Aid has initiated a GBV campaign to end impunity and ensure accountability of perpetrators of violence. Where did your organization stand on these issues prior to making these commitments

Norway has for a long time been committed to durable solutions for refugees and IDPs. Norway sees a strong Comprehensive Refugee Response Framework (CRRF), accompanied by a clear plan for implementation, as critical for protection of and durable solutions for refugees. Norway sees a need for greater emphasis on durable solutions for IDPs.

Middle-income countries such as Jordan and Lebanon hosts millions of refugees but face challenges in accessing concessional finance. This situation has exposed an important gap in the existing architecture of development assistance. The Global Concessional Financing Facility aims to address this challenge.

Achievements at a glance

Norway supports the CRRF process both politically and financially, particularly through its support to UNHCR, which in 2016 amounted to a total of NOK 829 million (approximately USD 100 million). Norway engages on a regular basis in dialogue with international organisations, NGOs and other states on the follow up of the CRRF process – normatively and in practice – in the five planned pilot countries. Norway has also supported the World Bank's engagement in this area, including though financing for its reports and its pilot projects on improving the humanitarian–development nexus. Like UNHCR, Norway sees this nexus as critical for achieving durable solutions for refugees and IDPs.

With regard to IDPs, Norway engages in dialogue with states, NGOs and international organisations, such as OCHA and UNCHR, on how to promote stronger and clearer international commitments to protect IDPs

Norway has contributed NOK 103.2 million (approximately USD 12 million) to the Global Concessional Financing Facility.

For follow-up to the Syria and Region Conference, see 5D.

How is your organization assessing progress

The monitoring mechanisms for the CRRF process have not yet been developed. Norway is considering how to support initiatives to improve mapping of the progress made, particularly with regard to the five pilot countries.
Challenges faced in implementation

As the CRRF process is still in its early stages, it is too soon to draw any clear conclusions in this respect. One obvious challenge, however, is the limited emphasis on durable solutions for IDPs. There is also a need to agree on monitoring mechanisms for the CRRF, particularly for the pilot countries.

Next step to advance implementation in 2017

Norway will continue to engage in dialogue with, and support, UNHCR’s work on the CRRF. We are in particular looking into the possibility of providing more support to the five pilot countries, especially Uganda. Norway also recognises the need for durable solutions for IDPs, and is considering ways of supporting global initiatives that can take this agenda forward, including cooperation with OCHA, UNHCR and relevant NGOs.

If you had one message for the annual report on what is most needed to advance the transformation Reduce and address displacement, what would it be Stronger international emphasis on the need for durable solutions for IDPs is urgently needed.

Where did your organization stand on these issues prior to making these commitments

Norway has been among the largest donors to the GenCap Project. The project seeks to enhance capacity and leadership with regard to gender equality programming.

Women are often the first to feel the impacts of conflict and radicalisation, and have a key role to play in conflict prevention and peace mediation. The idea of supporting the development of this Global Women, Peace and Security Index arose in response to the three evaluations of UN peace and security efforts as a way of delivering something concrete. We realised that a lot of good work was being done but that lessons learned were not necessarily reflected at policy level. The Global Solutions Exchange was established to remedy this.

Achievements at a glance

- Since the start of GenCap, the deployment of senior gender experts has increased significantly, from deployments totaling 30 months per year to 150 months in 2016.
- The work of the Peace Research Institute Oslo and the Georgetown Institute for Women, Peace and Security on the index is proceeding as planned. We intend to launch the index this autumn.
- We maintained our support to YouthCAN and the Women’s Alliance for Security Leadership (WASL) in 2016. In 2016, YouthCAN collected feedback on the UN Plan of Action to Prevent Violent Extremism and Security Council resolution 2250. A key recommendation was to invest in the education, capacity building and skills development of young people. Youth employment programmes can help to prevent radicalisation and violent extremism.
- The Global Solutions Exchange was launched in September by Norway's Prime Minister. The dialogue has been expanded to include youth and wider civil society.

How is your organization assessing progress

The GenCap project is currently undergoing an external review to assess the continued relevance of the expertise provided through the project as a strategic, inter-agency resource. In addition, the project has made progress in upgrading monitoring and evaluation tools, such as the IASC Gender and Age Marker (GAM), which has been instrumental in helping humanitarian actors to consider the needs, activities and outputs of humanitarian programming in this regard.

Our partners in the Global Solutions Exchange initiative provide semi-annual reports. Political dialogues have been facilitated with all mentioned partners, and technical-level meetings have been held.

Challenges faced in implementation

- The main challenge for GenCap is still in the area of financial support and the unpredictable annual funding situation. Ensuring sustainability after a GenCap adviser ends his or her deployment is a challenge as this is a long-term responsibility of the wider humanitarian community.
- Developing an index is a very complex task and has required regular dialogue, but it is proceeding according to plan.
- Young people's and women’s networks are developing as planned. It took some time to define the scope and format of the Global Solutions Exchange, but it is now operational. The next meeting will focus on education and preventing violent extremism.

Next step to advance implementation in 2017

The GenCap project aims to ensure that the rights of women, men, boys and girls are taken into account in decision-making process at all levels, while meeting their specific needs. Outcomes of the project review will guide the future strategic and operational direction of the project.

We are looking forward to launching the index in 2017 and consolidating the Global Solutions Exchange.

Where did your organization stand on these issues prior to making these commitments

It is important for Norway to contribute to a flexible and predictable humanitarian response. The idea behind the commitment was to inform UNHCR and UNICEF about the minimum funding they could expect from Norway for the Syrian crisis over the next three years, to help them in their planning.

Norway made the commitment on education in order to put education in emergencies higher up on the international agenda. We wanted to encourage stakeholders to scale up their efforts and thereby reach more children and young people. We believe the Education Cannot Wait initiative will raise political will and mobilise additional funds for education in emergencies.

Achievements at a glance

Norway provided NOK 440 million to UNHCR and NOK 348 million to UNICEF for programmes in Syria and the neighbouring countries in 2016 and signed a letter of intent for two years with both organisations in line with the commitment mentioned above.

When the Education Cannot Wait fund was launched at the World Humanitarian Summit, Norway announced a contribution of USD 10 million for the first year. Support to Yemen, Chad and Syria and the education cluster have been agreed, and more projects are in the pipeline. Norway has funded 12% of the initial investments.

Globally, Norway allocated more than 12% of its humanitarian funding to education in 2016. We have provided financial support to education through the UN, and international and Norwegian NGOs.

We have continued our political engagement for education in emergencies. Norway continues to raise this issue bilaterally and with humanitarian partners.

How is your organization assessing progress

Norway is meeting the commitments through the letters of intent with both UNICEF and UNHCR.

A report on the main achievements and key work streams within the education area since the launch of the white paper ‘Education for Development’ in 2013-2014 is being prepared. The report, when finalised in July 2017, will provide a comprehensive overview of work undertaken and results achieved in the last four years. A large part of the report will be dedicated to results related to education in emergencies.

For key partners and funding mechanisms, Norway has been advocating for and supporting the development of a global results frameworks, as well as improved standards for global reporting.
Challenges faced in implementation

The key challenge in implementation relates to conditions on the ground, both access and structural barriers to education.

Another challenge relates to mixed funding streams to donors’ approach to education in conflict. Funding streams vary according to whether donors approach each context within the humanitarian or development framework. As conditions shift on the ground, we must continuously assess what type of support we need to mobilise in a given context.

Next step to advance implementation in 2017

- In 2017, Norway will continue its support for the Education Cannot Wait fund. This includes efforts to mobilise support and funding from other donors.
- Norway is supporting the Second Conference on the Safe Schools Declaration, which addresses the issue of armed attacks on schools. We continue to encourage more states to endorse the declaration.
- From 2017 onwards, Norway will start implementing a results reporting system for all education agreements that fulfill certain criteria. When implemented, this system will allow Norway to aggregate information across a wide range of agreements, partners and contexts.

Where did your organization stand on these issues prior to making these commitments

Norway had recognised the potential and value of cash-based assistance and has worked to promote this. In 2015, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs hosted the launch of the report of the high-level panel on humanitarian cash transfers.

National and local responders are often the first to respond to crises. More effort is needed to strengthen their preparedness and response capacities.

Achievements at a glance

In 2016, with financial support from Norway and other countries, NORCAP - NRC’s expert deployment capacity - established CashCap, a roster of cash experts for multi-agency humanitarian response.

NOREPS, a network of public and private actors facilitated by Innovation Norway and funded by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs has identified the use of cash as one of their priorities in the area of humanitarian innovation. As part of the initiative, NRC is piloting the use of various digital payment solutions in humanitarian response.

Norway is co-chairing together with the UK the Good Humanitarian Donorship initiative’s work stream on cash.

Norway supports capacity strengthening of local and national responders through different instruments, both on the humanitarian and development side. For more information, please see 5A and Norway’s reporting on the Grand Bargain.

Next step to advance implementation in 2017

Norway will remain committed to the use of cash in emergencies in all areas of our work, and will continue to engage with our partners to further scale-up multi-purpose cash assistance in all funded projects. Our communication on the importance of the use of cash will be strengthened.

Norway will carry out an assessment to map the use of cash-based assistance in emergencies and protracted crisis by Norwegian NGOs.

Where did your organization stand on these issues prior to making these commitments

Disaster risk reduction is necessary to reduce the loss of lives and reduce costs at local, national and global levels. Early warning systems are crucial in this regard. Norway would like to contribute to efforts to increase the number of countries that have basic institutions in place for early warning systems and for getting information out to end-users in a meaningful way.

Achievements at a glance

Norway has a long history of national meteorological capacity and public access to information. Norway has been contributing to the establishment of the Global Framework for Climate Services (GFCS) under the World Meteorological Organisation, has been a major funder, and will continue its efforts to strengthen the GFCS's ability to deliver results. Achievements include:

- Strengthening the GFCS secretariat.
- Greater capacity of the national meteorological and hydrological services in 23 African countries to provide timely severe weather forecasts and warnings to users.
- Better coordination of climate services with national development plans in African countries.
- 269 seminars for farmers and 19 seminars for fishermen on the use of climate and weather information for decision-making in their sectors.

How is your organization assessing progress
Progress is assessed through annual reports from implementing organisation(s) and through external reviews and/or evaluations.

Challenges faced in implementation
There are several challenges in increasing capacity at country level. One of the main challenges is to ensure efficient coordination between the various initiatives. In particular, we have encouraged multilateral organisations to work more effectively together.

Next step to advance implementation in 2017
Norway will continue its efforts to increase the capacity of early warning systems through existing partners and initiatives like the GFDRR and GFSC. In addition we are supporting broader initiatives through multilateral and national organisations such as UNISDR, ADPC and the Norwegian Meteorological Institute. We also aim to ensure that development policies are designed to minimize disaster risk and build resilience.

Where did your organization stand on these issues prior to making these commitments

Norway is committed to a comprehensive approach that both addresses the immediate humanitarian needs and identifies durable solutions for those affected by the crisis. This was demonstrated at the Supporting Syria and the Region Conference in London in 2016 where Norway was one of the co-hosts.

Norway provides significant amounts of flexible and multiyear humanitarian funding. We see this as particularly important to ensure greater predictability and a more efficient response to protracted crisis.

Achievements at a glance

At the Supporting Syria and the Region Conference in February 2016, Norway announced a four-year pledge of approximately NOK 10 billion (about USD 1.2 billion).

Norway supports capacity strengthening of local and national actors through many different instruments and funding channels, both on the humanitarian and development side. This includes support to country-based humanitarian pooled funds and the Red Cross/Red Crescent movement. We encourage all our humanitarian partners to work in a way that reinforces rather than replaces local and national capacity whenever possible. This is particularly important in protracted crisis to help build resilience through complementary humanitarian and development programmes.

Norway is committed to the scale up of cash in humanitarian assistance. Cash matters because it empowers affected people, supports economic recovery and connect humanitarian and development approaches.

The Ministry provides financial support for the Humanitarian-Development-Peace Initiative, a joint initiative by the UN and the World Bank to work together in new ways to address fragility and build resilience.

Where did your organization stand on these issues prior to making these commitments

More support and funding tools for local and national responders is an integral part of efforts to strengthen humanitarian action. The Norwegian Ministry of Foreign Affairs supports capacity strengthening of local and national actors where appropriate through various instruments and funding channels, on both the humanitarian and development side. This includes support to the humanitarian country-based pooled funds (CBPFs) and the Red Cross/Red Crescent movement, including the Disaster Relief Emergency Fund (DREF).

Achievements at a glance

In 2016, Norway increased its contribution to CBPFs, a mechanism that we consider important for increasing and improving assistance by local and national responders. With a total contribution of NOK 246 million (approximately USD 30 million), Norway is among the largest donors to the CBPFs.

We are also engaged in policy discussions on how to improve local actor engagement in the delivery of humanitarian assistance, including through their access to pooled funding mechanisms. This is an issue that we raise with our humanitarian partners, for example in annual meetings with Norwegian NGOs and in country-based pooled fund meetings.

The Norwegian Ministry of Foreign Affairs is also engaged in efforts to simplify and harmonise reporting requirements.

Where did your organization stand on these issues prior to making these commitments

The 2030 Agenda and the Sustainable Development Goals have directed international attention to leaving no one behind. Norway will strengthen its efforts in the areas of stabilisation, conflict resolution and development in fragile states and regions.

Norway has increased its contribution to the African Union to enhance action in one of the three pillars of cooperation set out in the Memorandum of Understanding (MoU) between Norway and the African Union. Funding will go to peace and security work, specifically through the AU's programme Training for Peace, with a particular focus on women.

Achievements at a glance

For the last few years, Norway has championed efforts to promote global education and health, and has increased its funding for these sectors substantially. More focus will be directed to fragile states.

Norway is committed to strengthening the AU's institutional capacity and to carry out projects on governance and democracy in cooperation with the AU and the International Institute of Democracy and Electoral Assistance (IDEA), as well as projects on gender equality.

How is your organization assessing progress

Norway and the AU signed a MoU in late 2015, and progress in the various sectors has not yet been assessed. Preliminary findings indicate that the sectors mentioned above should continue to receive priority. The Norwegian Embassy in Addis Ababa is responsible for implementation and monitoring. Progress reports from various cooperating institutions also deal with these matters.

Challenges faced in implementation

The institutional capacity of the AU should be strengthened so that it can deal with a variety of challenges and work with many different partners.

Next step to advance implementation in 2017
In 2017, Norway plans to provide financial and technical support to the AU Mediation Support Unit (MSU), improve linkages between the AU and the sub-regional African organisations, and strengthen the UN-AU partnership on conflict prevention and mediation through support to the UN Office to the AU (UNOAU), in addition to continuing its ongoing support.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs is developing a strategy for engagement in fragile situations that will address the need for a more comprehensive, whole of government’ approach across the humanitarian-development-peacebuilding nexus.

Where did your organization stand on these issues prior to making these commitments

Norway is committed to strengthen principled humanitarian action to ensure access to the most vulnerable. At the same time, stronger collaboration between humanitarian and development actors are needed in order to address root causes, medium to long-term development needs and identify durable solutions for people affected by humanitarian crises.

Achievements at a glance

Norway has increased its humanitarian budget by more than 50% over the last four years. The Ministry of Foreign Affairs provides significant amounts of flexible funding to its humanitarian partners. This includes core support to WFP, UNHCR, OCHA, ICRC as well as contributions to the UN's Central Emergency Response Fund (CERF) and to country-based humanitarian pooled funds.
The Ministry has increased its multi-year commitments in protracted crises, for example in Syria and the neighboring countries and in the Lake Chad Basin. This provides more predictability for our partners and enables a more coordinated response across the humanitarian-development nexus.

In 2016, Norway provided more than NOK 2.7 billion (approximately USD 330) in development and humanitarian funding to support civilians in need due to the Syrian crisis.

Norway has contributed NOK 103.2 million (approximately USD 12 million) to the Global Concessional Financing Facility.

How is your organization assessing progress

The total amount pledged at the London Conference for Syria and the Region was USD 6 billion. Donors provided more than USD 8 billion in 2016. Together with the other co-hosts, Norway used every opportunity to ask donors to promptly allocate and disburse funding for Syria and neighboring countries throughout 2016.

Next step to advance implementation in 2017

Norway co-hosted the follow-up conference to London in Brussels in April 2017, and will continue to work to ensure that pledges and commitments from the conference are honored.

Where did your organization stand on these issues prior to making these commitments

Norway is a strong supporter of the CERF. It provides a critical lifeline of support for millions of people affected by humanitarian crisis and enables a more coordinated response at the country level.

The gap between humanitarian needs and the resources available to meet them is widening at an alarming rate, despite increased contributions from many countries, such as Norway. There is an urgent need to mobilise more resources through innovative partnerships and new financing modalities.

Norway is committed to high levels of ODA and to strengthening humanitarian assistance through the Grand Bargain.

Achievements at a glance
Norway has increased its humanitarian budget by more than 50% over the last four years.

In 2016, Norway contributed a total of NOK 388.5 million (approximately USD 45 million) to the CERF.

Norway continues to be an advocate for innovative partnerships, including public–private partnerships. Norway helped initiate the Education Cannot Wait fund, which was launched at the WHS. This is an example of innovative partnerships in which new and emerging donors, civil society and the private sector come together to deliver quality education to children in crises and emergencies.

Norway has zero tolerance for corruption which undermines humanitarian and development outcomes. Norway has prepared new regulations on money laundering related to implementation of the EU's fourth money laundering directive and to commitments made at the anti-corruption summit in London in May 2016.

How is your organization assessing progress
Norway has consistently been among the top donors to the CERF. The Norwegian Ministry of Foreign Affairs is represented on the CERF Advisory Group, which provides the UN Secretary-General with policy guidance and advice on the use and impact of CERF.

The Norwegian Ministry of Foreign Affairs took part in the negotiations of the Grand Bargain and endorsed it at the World Humanitarian Summit.

Challenges faced in implementation
There is a need to broaden and deepen the financial support base of the CERF to meet the Secretary-General’s call to double the Fund. The top ten donors provide almost 90% of all contributions received. This is not sustainable given the scale of the humanitarian needs worldwide.

For progress on the Grand Bargain, see separate report.

Next step to advance implementation in 2017
- Norway maintains its strong support for the CERF and continues to emphasise the need to broaden and deepen the financial support base.
- The Ministry will develop a new humanitarian strategy to reflect the changes in the humanitarian landscape.
- In 2017, Norway will continue to support the Education Cannot Wait fund, including the efforts to mobilise resources through innovative partnerships

If you had one message for the annual report on what is most needed to advance the transformation Diversify the resource base and increase cost-efficiency, what would it be Given the unprecedented level of humanitarian needs there is an urgent need to broaden and deepen the financial support base of the CERF.
